
OS01-3 Perspective of Current Academic Research Situation

○ Yoshihisa TANAKA¹

¹Kyoto University, Graduate School of Pharmaceutical Sciences

Though the notion of gender equality has been popular in current society, different generation imagine different impressions on it. There are huge differences against the understanding of gender equality between the people who had experiences of gender inequality many years ago and the young generation who regard gender equality as an undoubtable right. Therefore, it should be required for us to obtain the wide viewpoints to understand this gap. I got the bachelor degree this spring and am currently in the Ph.D course. In addition, since I was in the 6-year-pharmacist course, which was established with the revolution of pharmacist training field in Japan, I have been experiencing the transition scenes of both pharmaceutical education system and academic research. In this talk, I would like to talk about the current situation of gender equality in academic research field, especially regarding our life events in the future like having a happy home and managing both work and family, from the perspective of young generation. I hope that this talk will be of help to make a better understanding of gender equality in the current academic research field.